A Double Show?

By John W Blehm

Several years ago our Michigan Poultry Fanciers (MPF) show club put on two shows a year for a few years. Well, this year we are doing it again! Back then the two shows were on different weekends and known as our Fowl Fest Spring and Fall shows. This time both shows will take place at the same venue...sharing the same weekend, building and show coops. These twofers are often called a “double show” and even though we are kind of stuck with the title it is misleading. I remember one guy trying to explain a double show as one show being judged twice, but that just isn't true.

We will have two separate shows, with separately sanctioned APA and ABA meets, separate breed club meets, separate judging, awards, etc. Two coop cards will be hung on each exhibition coop, one for each show. These cards will be of different colors, such as white and yellow, to designate which show they represent and after judging they will be flipped over on the tops of the coops so judges from one show aren't influenced by the judging of the other. One show may immediately follow the other, but often both shows take place simultaneously with perhaps the bantams of one show being judged while the large fowl of the other show are judged. Some shows refer to these as Show #1 and Show #2, but since different colored coop cards are used for the two shows the shows are sometimes named for those colors, like the White Card Show and the Yellow Card Show to make it easier to distinguish between the two shows.

Two shows at one Fowl Fest saves setting up and taking down cooping twice compared to two shows on different weekends and it saves the show club the cost of a second rental fee for the facility. This means the combined entry fee per bird at double shows is less than paying the full fee twice. The paperwork for the show superintendent is pretty much doubled though and it generally takes twice the number of judges and clerks. For exhibitors that are into earning points from their wins with the APA, ABA and breed clubs these events are great opportunities. Exhibitors also have a chance to win double the number of awards on one weekend. Of course since these two shows are completely separate of each other when it comes to judging theoretically a disqualified bird in one show could be a winner in the other, just as those things can happen when some of the same birds compete at different shows on different dates. Please remember that a double show is really two different shows and although the same birds are in both shows the wins and results of one show have nothing to do with the other.

Poultry Show 101 – The Path to the Champion

How is the judging of a poultry show organized? The entire show is broken up into 21 classes. There are 6 bantam chicken, 6 large fowl chicken, 4 duck, 3 goose, 1 turkey and 1 guinea fowl category. The APA show covers all 21 classes. The ABA show only consists of the 7 bantam classes (6 chicken plus 1 duck). Judging works in a sort of "pyramid" fashion.

1. First, each color variety of a breed is divided into 6 groups: Old males, old females, young males, young females, old trios and young trios. Each group is placed 1 through 5.
2. Next all the first place birds in the color variety are judged for best of variety (BV). Then, the three remaining first place birds, plus the bird that was second to the BV bird, are judged for reserve of variety (RV).
3. All the BV birds of the breed are judged to determine the best of breed (BB). Then, the remaining BV birds, plus the bird that was RV to the BB bird, are judged to determine the reserve of breed (RB).
4. All the BB birds in a class are judged to determine the best of class. Next, the remaining BB birds, plus the RB bird to the BB, are judged to determine the reserve of class. All class champions and reserves of classes make up the "champion row".
5. On champion row, the following are determined in a similar manner: Champion and reserve large fowl chicken, bantam chicken, duck and goose.
6. The champions of duck and goose are judged to determine champion waterfowl. The chickens, turkeys and guineas are judged to determine champion landfowl.
7. Then the landfowl and waterfowl are judged to determine a show champion.
8. Now, at the same time we are doing an ABA show. Everything happens the same except the ABA only has 7 classes, the bantam chickens plus the bantam ducks. So, on rare occasions it's odd because the champion bantam chicken is not actually the champion bantam (ABA) because it got beat by the duck.
7. We are a double show, so all of this is done twice with a different team of judges. The junior show is completely separate from the open show and is judged in the same manner.

Any variety can be entered in the show. However, if it is not a APA or ABA accepted variety, it can win nothing higher than BV.
